Greetings, Brothers and Sisters:

Having spent the last year broadening the base of the Massachusetts labor movement, we must now take the time to see where we have been and to figure out where we are going.

This year, that task is somewhat easier than it has been in the past. We have been through nearly three years of Ronald Reagan, crackpot economics and New Right rhetoric. In short, we have been in the midst of a disaster.

We have been through a time where the enemies of organized labor, feeling their oats, have geared up for attacks on unemployment benefits, Social Security, the minimum wage, the environment, the prevailing wage and in a host of other areas.

There is a shining light amid all the gloom, however. In 1984, we get a crack at the rascals who would injure us and strip away the most basic of our rights and protections. We get a crack at Ronald Reagan if he runs, and we get a crack at lawmakers both here at home and in Washington. And we get a chance to support the people who have supported us.

Where we must go, then, is into the political arena with a passion and a commitment to make changes for the better.

It has been the history of the labor movement that when we are under attack, we not only weather the onslaught but move forward and make advances.

It is time for us to put forward a new program and a new vision of what this country is all about, a vision of jobs and justice for all. That is a vision antithetical to what we have seen espoused in Washington over the past several years.

It is time for us to commit the resources of the American labor movement, the primary resource being the wisdom and energy of the membership, to candidates for political office who share our vision. The working men and women of this country must elect officials committed to representing them.

We have seen signs that the labor movement is prepared to take an even more activist role in politics. That is to the good, but we must know clearly where we are going.

That is one of the reasons we get together, so that we can develop our strategy, build our strength and effectively channel our efforts.

Together, brothers and sisters, we can make jobs and justice the foundation of this country's future.

In Solidarity,

Arthur Osborn, President
Massachusetts AFL-CIO

Greetings, Fellow Unionists:

We in the American labor movement have inherited a rich history and tradition.

It is no exaggeration to say that virtually every progressive social advancement that has been made in this country — from minimum wage standards to free public education to Social Security and Medicare — have come about as a result of labor's leadership.

Now, we find ourselves confronted with those who not only want to stop our progress and bust unions but who actually want to turn back the clock on gains already made.

It is at a time like this that union solidarity becomes all the more important. It is up to the labor movement to organize, agitate and educate so that the advances we have made are not shunted aside.

And we need only look around us to see our strength, to see that we are not alone. We must continue to develop the bonds that are essential if we are to build unity and solidarity.

A large part of labor's strength lies in its very diversity. Machinists and hospital workers, carpenters and clerical employees, shipbuilders and snowplowers; all are welcome in the House of Labor. And we are a formidable force.

The labor movement has been criticized in the past for divisive internal bickering. Labor leaders have been told boldly that their concerns are not the concerns of the membership. And there is still the tired old cry that the labor movement has outlived its usefulness.

Those criticisms, however, have become fainter and grown weaker as the labor movement has closed its ranks in the face of an all-out attack. Labor has come together in a way that has all but silenced the critics.

To the criticism that labor's members were ideologically out of tune with the movement, there was the Solidarity Day march of more than half-a-million persons on Washington, D.C. Internal bickering has been replaced by a renewed commitment to solidarity and unity.

The response has been heartening even to those who never doubted the vitality of the labor movement and its members. The response in the face of adversity has been even better than anyone has a right to expect.

But that is not surprising, considering the history and tradition of the labor movement.

What the labor movement has accomplished has been the result of labor's unity and solidarity. Let's continue to build our solidarity, and continue labor's tradition of progressive achievement.

In Solidarity,

George Carpenter
Secretary-Treasurer
